LAND SALES AND NEW SETTLERS IN VIR-GINIA .- Those who have access to the newspapers of Virginia cannot have failed to observe that while all are speculating as to how they are to dispose of their surplus lands and attract capital and immigration, a process is quietly going on which will greatly affect the destinies of the State. We scarcely open a Virginia newspaper that does not mention the sale of land, and generally to some Northern man or company. We have before us as we write an imposing array of such notices of sales, extracted from our Virginia exchanges in the last two or three months. The lands thus sold lie in no particular locality, but are distributed throughout the various portions of the Commonwealth. The prices vary, of course, according to the quality of the lands, proximity to market, and those other considerations that add to or detract from the value of land. Many of these sales are effected through the instrumentality of the various enterprising land agencies that exist in the State. Some of the best lands are thus quietly changing hands. Shrewd capitalists from the North and from abroad have explored the State, searching out the finest lands, and examined carefully into such as have the advantage of water power and contain coal and mineral deposits. The process of colonization and of individual settlement thus quietly going on is but the beginning of that tide, which, in a few years, will sweep over the State, bringing an influx of capital and immigration that will place Virginia in the front rank of American States. - Northern Exchange.
